'American Heritage Sacred' Knebel Tells Memorial Day Audience

Andrew Knebel is principal speaker at services honoring Addison soldier dead in Maple Cemtery — Parade precedes exercises — Dr. Auringer is master-of-ceremonies—Orator was wounded abroad.

Living reasons why there should not be war were outlined by Andrew Knebel, World War veteran, in his talk given on the annual observance of Memorial Day in Addison. He was the principal speaker at the exercises held in Addison Maple Cemetery.

Members of local patriotic and fraternal organizations with school students formed a parade at the village hall. Those in the line of march were led by Chief of Police Elmer Bovee, former Legion Post commander here. William Lewis, South Addison and retired regular army soldier, was officer of the day and he was assisted by various members of Williams-Greengrass Post, American Legion and Spanish-American War veterans.

Addison's sole survivor of the War of the Rebellion, Eugene Albee, rode with the speaker of the day in the car of Charles L. Crane and the Gold Star mothers rode with Mrs. Frederick Frost, who with Mrs. Francis Edwards, another passenger, are Legion Auxiliary members.

The Gold Star mothers are Mrs. Mary Tobin, Mrs. Floyd Van Ortwick and Mrs. Stella Crane. Firing squad members were Charles Levi, Frank Root, William Lewis, Llewellyn Robbins, Thomas Gaffney, Walter Reynolds, Lawrence Hanrahan and Robert Mason. Color guardsmen were Homer Reynolds, Stacy Newman and Rathbun Stewart. The invocation in the cemetery was given by the Rev. Patrick Kelly of St. Catherine's Church.

The speaker was introduced by Major Horace E. Auringer, O. R. C., who spoke of the hardships of the pioneers and of the easiest way out taken by some of the present generation. He felt that sacrifices made by these pioneers had made the present generation soft and that the spirit of the protectors of American democracy should be instilled in the present generation instead of making them dependent upon government. He pointed to the hardships undertaken by the speaker to make his place in the world despite handicaps while others more fortunately situated physically are lying down and depending upon government for livelihood.

The speaker's remarks are quoted in full below.

My friends and comrades:

Again we come to the resting place of our departed comrades. The greatest tribute we could ever pay to these honored men, to these men who died in order that a nation might endure, to these men who died in order that democracy might live is a rededication of our loyalty and devotion to the principles for which they so nobly died. Again we come to pledge anew the covenant made with them on Flander's Field. Led on by the principles for which they died, we shall endeavor to carry on.

A score of years ago we were in the throes of a world conflict; a war to end all wars; a war to save the world for democracy. Today we stand upon the threshold of another world upheaval; a war which will not confine itself to the salvation of democracy alone but to the salvation of our very civilization. To contemplate this threat, we need only to observe what is already

Henry Sanford Memorial Day Speaker Here

The principles of government which American patriots gave their lives to establish and defend must be preserved at all costs, declared Henry R. Sanford of Bath in a Memorial Day address at Woodhull Monday afternoon.

Speaking on the theme, "Patriots of Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow", at community exercises in the school auditorium, Mr. Sanford reminded his hearers that "the priceless liberty we citizens of the United States now enjoy was bought for us by the blood of the heroes whose memory we honor here today".

"If our American plan of government was then worth so great a price, is it not now worth the best efforts we can put forth to preserve it?" he asked. "We are beset today from without and within by enemies who, through our kindness, our carelessness, our lethargy are enabled to plant subversive seeds among us which may one day produce weeds strong enough to strangle us. We must stop them. Let us not break faith with the martyrs who gave their lives that we might be free. Let us be ever alert and keep unceasing watch against all tendencies to replace our democratic principles with un-American schemes. Countless thousands of American patriots have died that a flaming torch might be kept alight; let us to whom they tossed that glorious flambeau ever hold it high."

Famous Artist Will Give Concert on Alfred U Chimes

Alfred, N. Y., June—Kamiel Lefevere, Carillonneur of the Riverside Church, New York City and a graduate of the international School of Carillon Art, Mechlin, Belgium, will give the dedicatory concert on the Davis Memorial Carillon at Alfred University on Sunday, June 12, at 3:00, as part of the one hundred second Commencement exercises.

Mr. Lefevere, a native of Belgium is ranked as one of the leading carilloneurs of America, if not of the world. He studied under Jef Denyn, the world's greatest carillon player, and has played "by command" for the King of Belgium, and has appeared in special concerts for the King of England and for the President of France.

Recently, Mr . Lefevere spent two days at the Alfred Campus adjusting and inspecting the Davis Carillon, and assisting Prof. Ray W. Wingate, who has been giving regular concerts this winter. Mr. Lefevere is very enthusiastic about the Alfred bells saying that they are of very fine quality and tone.

"You are very fortunate to get these old Belgian Bells (They all were cast between 1674 and 1784). The Belgian people regret that they have left the country," said Mr. Lefevere .

Allan Taylor Pneumonia Victim Burial Today

The hand of death struck relentlessly Monday afternoon, May 30, 1938 to remove from this life Allan C. Taylor, son of Lynn A and Mrs. Janet Lublin Taylor of this village. Allan's death occurred in Trudeau, N. Y., where he has been suffering from a chronic disease for several months. Death was caused by pneumonia contracted over the week-end.

Allan C. Taylor was born in Elmira, October 5, 1906. His parents are residents of this village and have been for many years. Allan attended the Addison schools and was graduated from the Addison High School with honors in 1924, being valedictorian of his class. He then entered the United States Foreign Service School in Washington where he took an intensive course of training for service in the United States consular service in foreign ports. This work he completed in eight months and was immediately sent to Ottawa, Canada, as vice consul. His appointment to the consular service was made by the then Secretary of State Henry Stimson. Pep-O Delivers Loaves of Bread By the Thousands

The Pep-O Bakery did a land office business over the Memorial Day week-end, depression or no depression. The local bakery baked and delivered 6,300 loaves of bread and 1,065 dozen rolls to feed the hungry picnickers and the folks from away who came home to spend the holiday.

Seeing "Bill" Pepper hard at it Saturday morning a representative of this paper remarked,

"Thought I saw you working last night, Bill?

"Oh yeah?" answered the genial baker of the country's bread. "I went at it at three o'clock Friday morning—an'still going".

The fleet of trucks which distributes Pep-O Bread over this and several adjacent counties was not large enough to take care of the demand Saturday. A number of trucks went out on two trips and some even made three to supply the groceries which found a ready market for Pep-O bread.

One new loaf which is coming into great demand is the Pep-O Buttermilk Bread "an old fashioned loaf baked under modern conditions." Introduced only a couple of weeks ago this loaf is rapidly growing in popularity.

There were six animals in the herd that made over 50 pounds of butterfat during the month. This group was led by a three-year-old heifer named Butler's Babe, sired by Sylvan View Royal Prince, that contributed a yield of 1458 pounds of milk, 58.32 pounds of butterfat.

There are 31 girls approved for graduation at this time and 15 boys. Addison Milk Producers in Favor of Federal-State Marketing Order

Meeting held under sponsorship of Agricultural Department of the Addison High School Tuesday—Fifty producers attend—Affects Community.

With the price of milk steadily declining a small but enthusiastic crowd of Addison milk producers voiced their approval of the new Federal-State milk marketing agreement at a meeting held Tuesday night at the Addison High School under the sponsorship of the Agricultural Department of the Addison High School.

T. C. Dickinson, a farmer of Cortland County, who is now working for the Metropolitan Bargaining Cooperative Association explained the new Order in detail and then answered questions concerning various features of the bill.

This bill has been proposed by the proponents of the Rogers-Allen bill. This latter bill went into effect last fall and succeeded in raising the price of milk during the fall and early winter months when milk was scarce. However as soon as milk became plentiful the dealers purchased out-of-state milk or took the milk from this state into other states and brought it back across the state line thus making it interstate milk. The Rogers-Allen law could control intrastate milk but was helpless to control interstate milk.

In an effort to take care of this interstate milk it was decided to ask Federal and State assistance.

The new order if adopted will provide for the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commissioner of Farms and Markets to appoint an administrator whose duty it will be to see what classes the milk was actually used in, to check tests and weights of buyers of milk, and to enforce the provisions of the Order.

The fundamental principles of the Order are three in number; the first being that all producers should share equally in the fluid market, that all will be paid the same price for milk used for the same purpose and that those who keep their surplus milk off the market will be rewarded for doing so.

The tentative prices set by the Order provides a price of $2.67 per cwt of 3.5 grade B milk for the winter months and a price of $2.20 per cwt. of grade B milk during the spring and summer months. The above prices are for milk used in class I. For class II milk the price will range between $2.00 and $2.40 per cwt. These prices may be slightly changed before the Order is voted on.

In addition to the above prices farmers who are members of a bargaining cooperative will receive one cent for each 100 pounds of milk produced by its members, those who belong to bargaining and collecting cooperatives two and one-half cents for each 100 pounds, while the members of a bargaining, collecting and processing cooperative will receive five cents for each 100 pounds.

The above prices are instituted in order to encourage the formation of cooperatives. In addition the dealers will be required to pay two cents per 100 pounds on all milk for administration expenses.

Another saving that will be made to farmers is the changed freight differentials. At present milk is subject to a freight differential based upon the less than carload lot can shipment rate. This order provides that the tank car freight rate shall be used in figuring transportation differentials. This change has been made because today almost no milk is shipped in less than car lot shipments.

After hearings which are now being held throughout the state are concluded the farmers will be given a chance to vote on the Order. If sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of the farmers vote for the bill (only those farmers whose dairies are inspected for the New York market are allowed to vote) it will become a law. Voting will probably take place this month. The Order may be ended any time that fifty-one per cent of the farmers vote against it.

Mr. Dickinson has spent considerable time in New York City studying marketing conditions. He has also studied the Boston, Richmond and Detroit Federal-State Order and he believes that this Order will be legal and will give farmers a better price for milk.

Assemblyman Cheney is Recuperating From Car Accident Last Week

Member of Assembly Guy W. Cheney of Corning, prominent attorney and Republican leader of Corning and Steuben County, was seriously injured Tuesday night of last week. The Corning Leader states that X-rays disclosed a knee fracture and a slight fracture of the skull, it was stated, but neither injury is serious. Mr. Cheney also suffered three broken ribs in the crash.

The car, driven by Mr. Cheney, was badly smashed when struck on the side by a Cohocton car on a curve at the south end of Cohocton.

He met with the accident at Cohocton when returning home at 10:30 P. M., from Rushville where he had met with the school board as legal advisor in centralizing the school. As he rounded Townley Corner at the south end of the village a car driven by Floyd Osborne of Cohocton, accompanied by his son Earl and wife came from the other direction.

Seeing the car, Mr. Cheney drove over close to the edge of the highway at the curve, but he said that the other car failed to round the turn and struck the side of the Cheney car near the driver's seat. The Cohocton car turned upside down, and the Corning auto was pushed off the road, so badly damaged that it could not proceed under its own power.

Mr. Cheney went to the home of a friend in Cohocton and later was brought to Corning by his son, William Cheney.

Earl Osborne was the most seriously hurt, having suffered a skull fracture . His wife sustained cuts and bruises and his father, Floyd Osborne, a fractured leg.

Litter Added to First Aid Equipment in Telephone Office

First Aid equipment in Addison has been augmented by a litter from the Corning headquarters. This is a stretcher for carrying patients in cases of emergency. The litter has been placed with the inhalator in the Telephone office, over the post office and is available for any emergency use in Addison or vicinity. There are several first aid certificate holders here who are qualified to render first aid in most any emergency. They are familiar with the uses for this equipment and also for rendering first aid. Dr. H. E. Auringer, director of the first aid course here, placed the litter in the telephone office.

Car and Truck Collide—Two Meet Death

Miss Genevieve House of Jasper and Ray Merrick of Knoxville met instant death early Monday morning when the car in which they were riding struck an oil truck on the Pierce bridge between Woodhull and Jasper. Apparently the driver lost control of the car on the sharp curve at the approach to the bridge and crashed into the truck. The impact threw both young people from the car, the body of Miss House landing in the creek bottom while that of Mr. Merrick struck the bridge.

Genevieve House was born in Jasper, April 13, 1917, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Justin House, and had resided in Jasper all her life with the exception of a few months while employed in Corning. She attended Jasper Central School. A host of friends were saddened by her tragic death.

Funeral services were held at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the home of her parents in Jasper.

Besides her parents, she is survived by one brother, Edgar House of Jasper.

THE MILK ORDER

Milk producers from one end to the other of the New York Milk Shed are pondering whether the proposed Federal Order for marketing milk shall be accepted here. It is, indeed, a perplexing question and should be carefully considered by each and every producer. After all it is the producers who will be most affected, and their decision should come after painstaking study of the Order in all its ramifications. For even though the Order can be summed by its proponents in five small sentences, its real text is a pretty complicated document which is charged with two or three sticks of real dynamite.

The Order has many things which will instantly win favor with every independent producer of milk. It is based on the promise that every producer should share the best, and the worst of whatever market there happens to be for fluid milk. It attempts to place a curb upon the unscrupulous dealer who will snatch up fluid milk at a cut price a little higher than the farmer would get for non-fluid, and dump it on the market at demoralizing low prices. And by the same method it removes from farmers the temptation to destroy their own best market by tossing milk into the hands of dealers who use these unethical methods.

A worthwhile provision of the Order is the clause which provides in dealing with surplus milk that a plant taking in "distress" milk may receive funds from the administrator for moving this surplus milk to another plant equipped to work this milk into manufactured products. To one who is not an expert on the subject, the Order seems to have a pretty carefully worked out scale of price differentials of payment for milk, in the three classes to producers at different points and in various seasons. In fact it seems as fair a price arrangement as could be designed for a commodity varying greatly in quality and demand. The freight differential especially may end an injustice whereby the producer was charged the less than tank car rate for his milk at the more distant points, despite the fact most of it really was shipped in tank car lots.

Article II of the Order, relating to the Market Administrator is, in the opinion of the writer, the least satisfactory part of the Order. Beginning at the last section, 5, we quote directly: "Responsibility. The Market Administrator in his capacity as such, shall not be held responsible in any way whatever to any handler or to any other person, for errors in judgment, for mistakes of commission or omission, except for his own wilful misfeasance, or malfeasance or dishonesty". A pretty broad clean bill of health for the Administrator.

Then the fact the Market Administrator is to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture, and is removable by him, puts the whole set-up right smack into politics. The further fact the Order does not specify what the salary of the Administrator is to be, leaving it up in the air with the clause; (he) "shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as shall be determined by the Secretary", is not a satisfactory arrangement. And when one delves deeper into the powers and duties of the Administrator the careful reader cannot fail to be impressed by the fact he would have the right to set up as broad a bureaucracy as the funds at his disposal would permit.

To be sure the Order is arranged so the producers will not give great consideration to this feature, for the financial cost is borne directly by the distributors who must pay not to exceed 2 cents a cwt for the privilege of operating under the Order. This levy will probably be passed on to the consumer, if the latter will stand it.

Two possible effects on marketing milk not mentioned by the cooperative milk bargaining agency, are suggested by reading the Order. First, there is a fair possibility the dealers who remain in business will voluntarily get together and eliminate some of their overlapping of milk routes. Second, there will doubtless be some loss of fluid market as buyers of cheaper milk find their source of supply drying up. If the Order is approved by producers in this milkshed, it is to be hoped that the dealers will devise economies which will prevent any great loss of market. For access to this fluid market is the one big advantage producers in the east have over their western competitors.

GRADE "A" PATERNALISM

Heretofore a fundamental principle of sound business operation has been the practice of "saving for a rainy day", of building of surpluses in time of prosperity to be used to alleviate the impact of depression. It is in this manner that private enterprise has always sought, so far as possible, to level off the "peaks and valleys" of the economic cycle. Corporate enterprises, during lean years, customarily relied temporarily on surpluses for maintenance of dividends, wages and salaries

But now the situation is reversed. Under present tax and regulatory policies private management either finds it impossible to accumulate a surplus during good years, or, as in the recent case of a leading electric utility, if a company is fortunate enough to have a surplus, federal authority may no longer permit private management to use its own judgment in the distribution of that surplus.

The management of the utility in question had decided to pay a nominal dividend in common stock from surplus, rather than from earnings which for the time being were at low levels. But a government commission stepped in and arbitarily termed the surplus as "unearned", and refused to allow the payment of a dividend. Thus the owners and stockholders of the utility were told, in effect, that they were not competent to handle their own property! On the other hand, during periods of prosperity, present tax laws like the undistributed profits tax, force the distribution of virtually all earnings in dividends to stockholders! Again, the judgment of private management is nullified.

If this is the manner in which Grade "A" Paternalism proposes to level off the "valleys and peaks" of the business cycle, the outlook for the future economic security of industries and individuals is about as dark as it could be.

THEORY RULE, OR RUIN

As we watch the country sink deeper into the Roosevelt depression, and thousands are thrown out of jobs weekly to add to the millions of unemployed, it is a burning pity that in word and deed the President seems obsessed with the idea of having his own way whether or not the country goes to smash while he is getting it. The pet theories sold to him by favorite New Dealers must be made to work on the guinea-pigs of America, even though the formula kills the guinea-pigs.

A case in point is the tax bill passed by Congress recently after a lot of research and hard work by several senators, among them the capable Democrat from Mississippi, Pat Harrison. Having seen the disastrous effect upon the country of the drastic excess profits tax Mr. Roosevelt sprung upon the country a couple of years ago, Senator Harrison desired to wipe this unwise levy completely off the books. But in order to compromise with the House on the tax bill, and to satisfy Administration lieutenants the committee left part of the excess profits tax in the new tax law. It was a bill designed to reassure business that the government was intent on going part way towards mending the confiscatory legislation which started the country on its plunge into the Roosevelt depression.

So the compromise bill was passed and business was convinced Congress has a will to end the Administration policy of reforming the country even at the risk of destroying it. The President's face was saved, in that the principle of the excess profits tax was retained—he had not suffered a complete rebuff as many Congressmen thought should have been delivered. But the President was not sitisfied; actually he was incensed that Congress had dared to question his great knowledge of fiscal affairs, in that the new tax bill changed his brain child. Speaking before a crowd of school children in one of the government's model towns he scathingly rebuked Congress and stated he would let the tax bill become law only by allowing it to lay unsigned the necessary period. And with that sounding-board of school children Mr. Roosevelt informed Congress he would insist on tax revision next year to restore the troublesome levies.

Thus did the President show he is more interested in putting his pet theories of reform into practice than he is in seeing the country return to prosperity. He is determined to have his way, even though people tramp the streets looking for jobs, as a result of his crack-pot schemes that have broken down business and dried up the normal channels of trade. He keeps himself solid with the indigent, unthinking classes by pouring forth government money for relief, at the same time he is instituting measures which draw the country deeper, and deeper in the depression.

The hope of the country lies in Congress, just as it rested upon Congress to save it at the time of the dictatorial court-packing fight last year. And Senator Harrison lost no time in answering the President's tirade over the tax bill. "We had but one view in mind", Senator Harrison said, "and that was to be fair to the taxpayers of the country, to raise the revenue required for the economical administration of the government and not to abandon American principles and governmental principles of long standing. * * * "I hope that the high intention and aspirations of the American Congress in framing the tax legislation to help business will not be affected, and that what we had expected will not be dampened and thrown away by the remarks which the President made yesterday in his memorable speech.

"We shall need another tax bill next year. Many of the nuisance taxes expire next year. The corporation tax and the undistributed profits taxes expire at the end of 1939, so we will need new taxes. But be not deceived. We have not abandoned the American principle of taxation. We have tried to be fair and just to the country".

On Silent Assumptions

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

TESTIFYING before the Congressional committee investigating the T. V. A., Mr. Arthur E. Morgan, former chairman, who was removed by President Roosevelt for "autocracy," repeated his charges that the President has not had an honest Administration. He said that this did not mean that directors "have taken bribes or stolen money or profited financially through their official acts," but, he said "there are more subtle forms of failure to meet the public trust."

Underlying all good democratic government are certain silent assumptions. Often they are not written in the law at all. But it is the violation of these assumptions which has seriously disturbed many who are in agreement with most of the objectives of the New Deal.

It is assumed, for instance, that the accountings of public agencies will be at least as scrupulous as that required by law from private industries.

It is assumed that the government will not use the taxpayers' money to make propaganda for itself.

It is assumed that if public funds are turned over to the Administration, unearmarked, for expenditure on relief and recovery measures, they will not be allocated with a view to their political effects.

It is assumed that if a man holds a position of public trust whereby he has control over the livelihood of millions of people, he will scrupulously refrain from using that position as a means of bringing political pressure.

It is assumed that no administration or party in power will so exploit its position as to make it almost impossible for any other party or administration ever to come to power.

For if these assumptions are violated, then it is theoretically possible for any administration or any political party to keep itself in office forever. And that condition means the end of democratic government.

All of these silent assumptions are repeatedly violated. Mr. Morgan claims that they are violated in the T. V. A. by subtle misrepresentations both of the position of the T. V. A. and of the viewpoint of Commonwealth and Southern Corporation, with which it has been competing.

Nearly every government agency today has a press agent attached to it, paid by the taxpayers, whose business it is to "sell" the activities of that agency to the public. This seems to me to be a thoroughly immoral procedure. If a party in power can use public funds to make propaganda for itself, it puts itself in possession of instruments to which it has no right; it misuses money voted for another purpose altogether.

If the President has the power to give or withhold funds voted for relief and public works to induce recovery, then he is under the strictest moral obligation to distribute those funds with the most important justice, and totally without regard to the political influences that he may or may not thereby help. But it is generally conceded in Washington today that Federal money is being distributed with a view to influencing the outcome of the political contests now going on.

Mr. Harry Hopkins is at present the largest employer of labor in the United States. He is under the strictest moral obligation not to use his position to influence the outcome of any political struggle.

If any man in the United States ought to assume the position of an impeccable civil servant that man is Mr. Hopkins. But he does not assume it.

In the fight over the Supreme Court Mr. Hopkins took sides, and went on the air and implied in his speech that if the Supreme Court bill did not pass relief for the poor would be threatened.

Now, in the last few days Mr. Hopkins has taken sides in the Iowa Democratic primaries. Mr. Hopkins's personal opinion about the merits of one or the other candidates is of no importance. But the opinion of a man who is dispensing several billion dollars' worth of money—money extracted from all the taxpayers, regardless of their politics—becomes of overwhelming importance.

It is precisely this continual violation of simple imperatives that defeated the bill for the reorganization of the executive. If we had a scrupulous civil service; if we could be sure that increased executive power would not be used largely or even partly with the object of keeping the Administration in office, then the people of the United States might very well be in favor of enlarging that power in the interests of greater efficiency in government.

But they have no such faith.

Green Cabbage Worm A Troublesome Pest

The common cabbage worm is apparently increasing in abundance in New York State and is giving cabbage and cauliflower growers some concern, say entomologists at the Experiment Station at Geneva, who are recommending the use of derris dust as an effective means of control, especially where objections are raised to the use of the usual arsenical sprays and dusts.

The Geneva specialists have prepared an illustrated circular on the green cabbage worm and its control in which they also discuss briefly the importance and control of other types of cabbage worms of which there are at least three important species found in cabbage and cauliflower fields of this State.

A copy of the circular, which includes detailed instructions on mixing the dusts and sprays and on the time and method of applying them, may be obtained upon request to the Station.

As in the case of many other major pests of fruits and vegetables, the green cabbage worm is of European origin, explain the scientists It was evidently first introduced in the vicinity of Quebec around 1859 and has spread from that point to all sections of the United States. It is rated the most common and most destructive of the several species of worms that feed on cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, and brussels sprouts in New York State . Its presence in the field is marked by the appearance of the white butterflies which are a common sight from early spring until late fall.

Cabbage growers have a choice of treatments, but most growers favor the use of the derris dust preparations which have recently been introduced to meet objections on the part of public health officials to the use of arsenical sprays or dust on the ground that they leave objectionable residues. Derris has proved quite effective but is more expensive than arsenicals. In western New York arsenicals are still favored for use on Danish and kraut cabbage.

The Mexican Thundercloud

By WALTER LIPPMANN

OWING to the critical condition of Europe, the trouble which is brewing in Mexico is of more than local significance. For there is, to put it bluntly, some danger of a civil war in Mexico In such a war the alignments would be not unlike those in Spain, and a civil war of this kind would divide the peoples of this hemisphere as the peoples of Europe are now divided. In every American nation, our own included, men would take sides passionately; pan-American co-operation would be disrupted, and the western hemisphere might cease to be a citadel of peace and order in this troubled world.

If the Mexican class struggle is allowed to degenerate into violence, the fumes of that struggle will poison the whole hemisphere, embittering the internal problems of the American nations and their relations with one another. The issue is far greater than that of the legal claims of foreign investors in Mexico. The paramount interest of the United States is that under no circumstances shall there be a civil war in Mexico, and that under no circumstances shall non-Mexicans be permitted to use Mexico's difficulties to foment a civil war.

In making our policy toward Mexico we must feel about the prevention of civil war as Lincoln felt about the preservation of the Union when he said: "My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that."

If a policy of this sort is to succeed, the United States government must act on two parallel lines. On the one hand, it must prevent foreign intervention in Mexico in support of a rebellion against the government; it must allow the government to have arms if it needs them, and it must refuse arms to rebels. It must do these things not out of sympathy with the government's social philosophy but because in the present state of affairs any constituted government in Mexico is to be preferred to a civil war. The only practical alternative to upholding the Cardenas government would be to intervene to overthrow it at once, and since that is obviously out of the question, since anarchy in Mexico is to be avoided at all costs, since hesitation on our part will promote anarchy, the only safe course is to take a decisive stand in support of the government.

But this alone will not save the situation. For the Cardenas government is being driven along a path inside of Mexico which is almost certain to destroy its revenues, to weaken its power, and to cause such distress and resentment as to make almost inevitable a counter-revolution. Therefore, side by side with the decision to uphold the government, and as an integral part of that decision, the United States government needs to use all its influence, and it is potentially very great, to persuade President Cardenas that the present tempo of the revolution and the current methods can lead only to disaster.

The Mexican revolution which began nearly thirty years ago is fundamentally an agrarian uprising against a feudal system. In one form or another, whether by the division of the great estates into small peasant holdings or by their conversion into communal holdings for the Indians, the destiny of the Mexican revolution is to solve the land question. The industrial problem is, in any true perspective, a subsidiary one. For out of some 5,000,000 of Mexicans actually at work of some kind, only about 750,000, or say, 15 per cent, are in industry including petroleum and mining.

The successful solution of the land question, including the development of schools, depends, however, on the government revenues and the wealth produced by industry. And this industry is based largely, of course, on foreign capital, since Mexico has very little capital of her own.

Such reports as I have seen from competent observers whose disinterestedness is above suspicion agree that American influence in Mexico has not been used to advise the government of the far-reaching dangers of this situation and to help it against the extremists by the kind of firmness that only a friend can exercise. For in dealing with Mexico personal relations are far more important than legal principles and diplomatic notes. Unless the United States is represented in Mexico City by some one who is at once an indubitable friend and yet an independent and candid adviser, we shall lack the means of persuading the government to take the steps necessary to avert a very dangerous civil struggle.

Milk Stabilization Hearings To Be Resumed in Albany Friday

Syracuse, June 1—Word to "cease firing", last Thursday, May 26, marked a week's adjournment in the State-Federal public hearings of the Rogers-Allen Law measure, following a series of five white-heat sessions in New York. The measure in question sees the 55,000 farmer dairymen of the Metropolitan Producers' Bargaining Agency trying to enlist State and Federal aid to stabilize their now-chaotic New York market. The hearing will go into its 10th session Friday, June 3, in the State Office Building at Albany.

This "progressive hearing" has gone about the state. It opened in mid-May at Albany, then jumped to Malone, Syracuse, Elmira and New York. It is estimated that 10,000 farmers, dealers and consumers have attended. They have had their chance to testify with constructive opinions toward the measure's final revision before it is submitted to a farm-vote at future date.

Three main camps have entered this fray: 1. The producers themselves, who drafted the measure and are battling desperately to see it put into effect. 2. The opposing dealers, who are fighting the plan tooth and nail through attorneys, and stalling (while milk is cheap) for all the time they can get. 3. The New York consumers, who, although throwing the heft of their friendship toward farmers are strongly bidding for milk at the lowest possible retail price.

In upstate sessions, the tempo was slow and leisurely; albeit strong feeling was there. Straight-spoken farmers voiced their complaints in rugged-hued language, even though there were episodes of fever heat.

But in New York itself, what a change of color and atmosphere! Here, rapid-fire arguments spoken in the crisp-cut phrases of suave, high-powered attorneys. Here you could put a dollar-mark on every word spoken. Here—shrugs, gestures; language foreign to the farm.

The scattering of farmers themselves almost seemed like an outcast lot as dealer upon dealer turned on the heat. But those farmers were there with battle in their hearts. They took the onslaught blow by blow—and parried like stout fellows. From the smooth-operating dealer camp came the following attack:

The dealers sparred for time, even an indeterminate delay. Some even wanted to chuck the whole measure out the window. They branded the measure "unfair", "unwarranted", "appealing to class prejudice". It was obvious to observers that they were trying to blast this farmer-plan piece by piece, substituting for it a plan of outright dealer control.

Their trend was smooth, well-oiled. They suavely said, in effect, "Yes, we want a plan. We [illegible] delighted to cooperate [illegible] that little [illegible] provided the key to a [illegible] screw twist that went far afield [illegible] the present farmer proposal.

The official record is sprinkled with pleas for more time to consider. Farmers could see why—for all they had to do was look at the current price of milk, and wonder how much longer it would keep them going.

Spear-head for the dealer attack was an attorney who represented a unit in a (nationally-known milk combine. He prefaced his testimony with a brief statement that his company is prepared to enter into a marketing agreement based, in brief, as follows: "The agreement shall be fair to producers and distributors. It shall not unfairly burden consumers. It shall be formed, and executed, to justify expectation of comprehensive enforcement with an even hand".

The attorney submitted that his client "is not convinced that the proposed marketing agreement meets the standards named in the preceding paragraph".

He testified that "time has not permitted the making of a complete analysis of the proposed agreement". From that point of departure he read through 18 pages of protest and objection.

A thrust at "class prejudice" came to the surface, as evidenced by this attorney's following statement: "Most regrettably the sponsors of the so-called proposed marketing agreement have unwarrantedly prejudged the handler attitude, and have appealed to class prejudice."

Other excerpts from his testimony are these: (A) The New York Milk Shed has a potential production far in excess of its present output. All factors indicate a heavy overproduction in the years immediately ahead. (B) The plan which has been presented is opportunistic and is in no sense a permanent solution of this fundamental problem.

Apparently astride the mid-ribbon of this drastic farmer-dealer tug of war, strong spokesmanship for the New York consumer group was entered into the official record. They, apparently, were playing both ends to the middle. At times these consumer spokesmen offered almost a touch of comedy relief in their efforts to steer a diplomatic course through the cross-fire between farmers and dealers. At times, they rushed to the aid of farmers—belligerently. Again, they pointed warning fingers. The weight of testimony, however, gave strong indication that these millions of New York consumers have every sympathy for the farmers.

However, it seems to resolve in to just that — sympathy. In this, a leading spokesman declared that the ebb-tide retail low, seen last winter, is even too high a price to pay the milk-man.

Fighting desperately every hag-ridden inch of the way was the other principal faction, the farmers themselves who had drafted this price-getting measure. In New York these farmers were the minority group. They were simply scattered here and there; their bronzed, thoughtful faces indicating their position. Gone was the moral support of sheer numbers that these men had seen in upstate sessions. They were fighting with thinned ranks—but not unaided.

Dramatic spot of all producer-testimony was seen during the final morning when Earl C. Bardin, treasurer of the Bargaining Agency, summarized so much of the farmer testimony previously submitted. Here are Mr. Bardin's words: "I've been listening to these dealers — these middlemen — opposing this attempt to obtain a living price for milk. I think when we go back and tell the upcountry farmers about this opposition by dealers they will be all the more for the plan. I've never seen such a scramble by any group for an imaginary hole as has been going on here. I believe in this order, and I'll fight for it to the last ditch. I think it is the best thing for the dealers that has come up in years. They are always telling us that all they care for is that all dealers pay the same price for milk. Well, here is something that assures just that. I can't see any harm in their all paying producers the same price. But that isn't what they want. They want advantages. They want to chisel. Well, farmers aren't going to stand for it. These dealers down here are sitting on a keg of dynamite and don't know it. You can't get by on dollar milk. You heard yesterday that unless something is done quickly for farmers there may be the worst strike this milk shed has ever known. I don't know but what it would be a good thing right now. Milk isn't worth much to us farmers at present prices, and maybe we might as well pour it out on the ground—it's good fertilizer!"

Gazing Back In Addison

Editor Advertiser,

As one gazes back into Addison vistas of the eighties and early nineties, it is rather difficult to give the coloring, setting and atmosphere of the times.

One has to live through it in order to fully understand. Still, a few things are not changed, the Canisteo River and the bald face of the Pinnacle survive. About all else is a vanished town. One listens in vain for the Idlewild's whistle or the clang of the blacksmith's anvil. Muddy and dusty roads as well as a flux of wagons and drays are gone forever.

However, one picture that illustrates the many, stands out on the rim of one's memory like the streamlines of a Rolls Royce. That egg-shaped American House bus is depot bound. Joe Ford at the controls, while Old Nig, Civil War hero, is winging on. Along the Main Street are zigzagging groups of ma[illegible] and boys going up to see t[illegible] come in.

One of the big events we used to wait for was the show or circus. Sometimes a show would play three successive nights. Uncle Tom's Cabin, Rip Van Winkle and East Lynne were typical runs of the time.

Uncle Tom's Cabin was the big hit with us youngsters. Such menial tasks as filling the woodbox and emptying ashes grew unpalatable. The play was the thing. Next day the players strolled along the street. Once little Eva was seen playing in the mud. However, the fall of a heroine doesn't prove anything against Uncle Tom. But someway or somehow Tom, like Rip Van Winkle, was a thirsty soul, and another idol fell.

Yet life in those days was not all an illusion. James A. Estee, a gentleman and scholar, was principal of the high school. Professor Estee and his corps of teachers not only taught us the studies of the curriculum, but also something of manners, morals and patriotism. Incidentally, too, we became acquainted with some real men; Washington Irving, Whittier, Longfellow and Holmes, literary stars of the ages.

We learned from our history and current news that our country, then as now, had more or less political static, but we had some thrills that welled up in our puerile hearts as we studied that orange-covered Barnes history. Washington, gripping that star of hope while making his lonely vigil, and his soldiers with blood-stained feet drilling during that awful winter at Valley Forge.

Then, at a later date there's another scene. Gettysburg, awful Gettysburg had been fought. July's blazing suns were gone and November's chill was on where an assembly of folk are gazing charm-bound at a tall, gaunt figure making an immortal address, an address kindred to a mountain sermon preached nearly two thousand years ago by a Nazarene carpenter who walked and talked and moved and had His being among those common folk in the hills and valleys of far away Judea.

According to Henderson's iron bound grammar, the circus should have come after the show. Too late now. The steamer has gone around the bend, hence whi gaze at choppy water spattering soggy piles.

There is so much to a circus that it is hard to tell where to begin. As youngsters, we liked to see the elephant drink. Watering the elephant usually meant a free ticket to the circus. Walter Griswold was generally the lucky one for that job. The losers, however, had sweet revenge watching the elephant take his time. Strange thing about an elephant. He doesn't seem to realize boys are in a hurry to fill him up. At least, he seems to be filled looks at us peacefully as much as to say, "there, there, boys now go and have a good time." But,—"Gee! he isn't through yet".

Since writing the above, I have been informed that elephants are watered at night. Well! it all goes to show that times have changed.

There are other screen pictures of the mind film turned by memory's endless reel; Charles Brewster, with a smooth West Point precision, drilling the Hook and Ladder men on Parade Day, a mile race in the old skating rink, Charles Parks in the lead sprinting over the finish line a winner, Lew Burrell on the mound with his bag of puzzling curves plus that swift pivotal foot-turn as he throws a man out at second, Bun Kress, the ice skater, doing his fancy figures west of the Main street bridge, Charlie Craft, turning flip-flops in the air backward and forward, Billy O'Connor, riding horseback from Elmira and breaking into Addison, with a bundle of papers telling the news of the Johnstown Flood.

During summer in those olden days if one took a voyage on Canisteo's waters from Lonesome Lodge to the Mountain, he would have seen one or more of the following fishermen; Linos Griswold, H. B. Sutliff, Bill Cook, Doc Houck, Charlie Townsend, the Bullock brothers, Ike and Bill, Jake Kress, Hiram Russ, Bill Stevens, Doctor George Crane and William Fritts. Hope I have not missed anyone, 'I hope, I hope'.

Speaking of Linos Griswold reminds me of a story. Mr. Griswold ordered a load of wood, fixed his wood shed in his usual careful manner, opened the right gate and waited. Two days passed but no wood. In the meanwhile he ran out of tobacco, hastened down to Ed Jenning's store, gone about ten minutes. When he came back the wood had been dumped on the grass while the wagon broke Walter's fish pole in three pieces.

Here is another true one. Two boys in the middle teens, A and B meet in the vicinity of Curtis Square. One word leads to another. B says too much. A has a bunch of suckers strung on a sprig stringer with which he strikes B. The suckers carom from B's head into the asparagus bed.

Well! those old times are gone, and I see my time is up, so until some future date Old Addison and I will say to you, Cheerio!

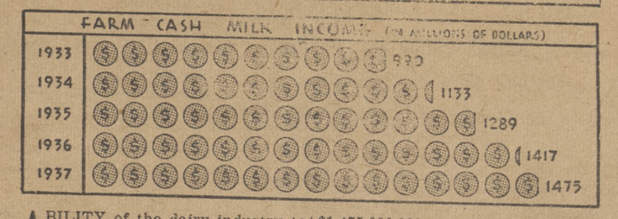
Milk A Mainstay Of Farm Income



ABILITY of the dairy industry to maintain cash payments to farmers for milk and employee payrolls is evidence, says the Milk Industry Foundation, that this 3½ billion dollar industry is a mainstay of agricultural and industrial purchasing power during periods of recession.

Milk, the largest source of farm [illegible] products was down 10 per cent.

Total farm cash income from milk for the twelve months of 1937 was $1,475,000,000, an increase of $53,000,000 over 1936 and $490,000,000 greater than the low of 1932. An important factor in the steady increase of dairy farm income results from the axiom that farmers benefit most from milk sold in fluid form to homes, stores, hotels, restaurants.

Foundation reports from 136 markets throughout the country show that payrolls of milk companies were 4.3 per cent higher and employment down only 1.8 per cent in January 1938 compared with January 1937.

Further evidence of the importance of fluid milk distribution to economic stability is that despite curtailed business activity during the last quarter of 1937, milk company payrolls increased 4.8 per cent and employment .7 per cent over the last quarter of 1936.

Farmers Plan Buffalo Tour

Preliminaryy arrangements for the 4th annual Buffalo livestock tour would indicate the 1938 trip will be the best in the history of this event, according to farm bureau officials.

Inaugurated four years ago to study livestock marketing methods first hand, interest in this annual event has increased to the point that 500 Steuben county farmers have attended over the past two years.

Buffalo visits have included such points of interest as the Producers Co-operative Stockyards, horse auctions, Grand Central Terminal, Museum of Science, airport, Dold's Packing House, Ford Factory, radio stations, GLF plants, and news offices.

A complete program will soon be announced, and it is anticipated that the tour will be conducted about the third week in June. Reservations should be made with the farm bureau office in Bath before June 15.

Classify Holstein Herds June 7-8

Something new in farm bureau dairy meetings will be inaugurated in Steuben County according to a dairy committee announcement. Dairymen will meet June 7 and 8 to see J. D. Burke, Secretary of the N. Y. S. Holstein Breeders' Association, classify according to type, two of the leading Holstein herds in the county.

Although farmers for some time have realized that type is important in dairy animals, the relative value of type in our herds will be illustrated at these meetings.

Herd classification emanates from the herd analysis work that is becoming such a factor in breeding programs thruout the county. Each milking animal in the herds will be judged in these demonstrations according to the manner in which she compares to the ideal.

The demonstration will enable breeders to determine more accurately the status of their own herds in regard to type and also point out for the breeders the essentials of correct type. Cow families and sires which are transmitting these desirable characters will be located if possible.

The meeting on June 7 will be held at Ketch Bros. Farm at Cohocton and June 8 at C. A. Stewart and Son Farm, Addison. Both meetings start at 1:30. All farmers are invited to attend.

Personal Daintiness As Important As Good Manners, Says Authority

Lillian Eichler, author of famous New Book of Etiquette, warns women against carelessness

● Good manners and personal carelessness simply do not go together, according to Lillian Eichler—long recognized as one of America's leading etiquette authorities.

No matter how charming and gracious a woman may be, how well she knows and understands the rules of good conduct—if she is careless about her person, if she fails to keep herself fresh, dainty and absolutely beyond the possibility of offending—she can not be looked upon as socially acceptable.

"I have known women who destroyed every chance for social success by failing to realize this important fact," says Miss Eichler. "I knew one woman who was perfectly beautiful and a brilliant conversationalist, but she was never really popular until she realized—to her great humiliation—what was wrong."

The sad part about body odor is that so few people realize when they offend. According to Miss Eichler, a great number of really cultured men and women are guilty of this social taint. And as she points out, it is doubly unforgivable inasmuch as it is very well known that daily baths with Lifebuoy effectively stop body odor.

That more and more people are beginning to recognize body odor as a social blunder is indicated by the result of surveys made by eight leading magazines. Thousands of women were questioned as to their soap preferences. Results show that more American women use Lifebuoy for the bath than any other soap. And Lifebuoy is also the No. 1 bath soap of men and children. It is now pretty generally known that no ordinary soap can stop body odor the way Lifebuoy does, for Lifebuoy contains an exclusive purifying ingredient not found in any other popular bath or toilet soap.

Lifebuoy is famous for the complexion, too. Scientific tests on the skins of hundreds of women have proved it to be more than 20% milder than many so-called "beauty soaps" and "baby soaps."

To Plant a Garden?

Well it is too late for long-season varieties of vegetables like seed onions and tomatoes. But many vegetables will still yield good crops if vigorous seed are planted this month in good ground!

For the gardeners who were late in getting their ground plowed we have re-ordered a new supply of Burpee's Seed, varieties of which our stock was running low. So you can still buy in bulk, Burpee's corn, wax beans, Swiss chard, cucumbers and many other late growing vegetables.

Assemblyman Stuart Speaks at Cohocton Memorial Day Service

"There are only two ways to prevent war: the universal application of the Golden Rule, or peace by force", declared Assemblyman William M. Stuart in a Memorial Day address at Cohocton, as he issued a sound warning to Americans to beware of the dangers that lurk behind movements of Pacifism, Communism and Nazism in our country.

Mr. Stuart's introduction was a vivid picture of the scene that attended the delivery of Lincoln's Gettysburg address. He accredited this great president with originating the idea back of the establishment of our national Memorial Day.

The speaker cleverly wove into his discourse many interesting and salient facts that have greatly affected the history of our nation and heaped praise upon those heroes of our several momentous wars.

In substantiation of his statement that there were only two ways to prevent war the Assemblyman explained that America had never been a military nation, had never sought war and will never seek war. He pointed out that in order to assure peace for herself at this time of world-wide disorganization and chaos, an adequate army and navy were absolutely essential to preserve our liberty and ancient ideals, and to subject ourselves to the mercy of many nations, who are at present seething in militarism would leave us vulnerable to the destruction of our freedom and liberty.

Assemblyman Stuart closed his speech by turning to the veterans of the great war and addressing them as follows: "Veterans of the A. E. F. and members of the American Legion, I now speak to the living and the dead. Back of you, lining both sides of the path which leads from the present to the battlefields of the Revolution, and standing at present arms, are the great ghosts of our military history. And as those departed comrades of our former wars salute you, so do we present now salute you. We are grateful for what you did for us, and we assure you we shall never forget. To quote from Theodore O'Hara's famous poem, 'The Bivouac of the Dead':

"'Nor shall your glory be forgot
While fame her records keeps,
Or honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps'."

Soldier Dead List of Last Week Corrected

Owing to lack of knowledge and personalities there were a few errors in spelling and initials of names of War veterans buried in Addison cemeteries. Some of the corrections have been called to the attention of the writer of that article, during the past week.

The burial place of Farrell Dininy, the sole Revolutionary soldier mentioned in last week's article is in doubt and there is no mark on the spot. The D. A. R. have made an exhaustive search of records to determine the validity of the claim and have been unable to substantiate it. The writer used the fact mentioned last week merely as hear say.

Col. Henry Baldwin is buried in Rural Cemetery, not John Baldwin, Levi Bronson was written Levi Brown, H. B. Sutliff was omitted entirely from Rural Cemetery, James E. Wilson was written James R. Wilson, Samuel L. Ballman was written Samuel Baldwin, Charles Wombough should have been written George Wombough, W. W. Angle is the correction for W. M. Angle written last week.

Col. L. A. Jones is the sole veteran of the Civil War or any other war, buried in the Baldwin Cemetery, east of Addison on the Rathbone road. His name was omitted last week.

Dutton Peterson and the McNaboe Bill Analyzed

The following is an editorial which appeared in the May 11 issue of the Ithaca Journal. Because it so admirably sums up the issues of the Peterson-Cross controversy over the vetoed McNaboe bill and points out that "if there is any merit in the bill Mr. Cross ought to be willing to submit the argument to examination and rebuttal", commending Governor Lehman and Assemblyman Dutton S. Peterson in opposing this bill we print it herewith in full:—

The state commander of the American Legion gains no prestige for himself or does the Legion no good by championing the notorious McNaboe bill which Governor Lehman killed in one of the best veto messages he has ever written. But if Mr. Cross means to continue to lobby for the bill, as he did with success in the legislature, he ought to be willing to stand up to his guns in joint debate. If there is any merit in the bill, Mr. Cross ought to be willing to submit the argument to examination and rebuttal. So far he has declined to do so.

Or if this is a political controversy and not properly a matter for Legionnaires to enter into, why use his official position to pillory the governor and the members of the legislature who saw the dangers in the bill and refused to be gulled or lobbied into supporting it?

This bill was railroaded through in the closing hours of the session. It is safe to say that not many legislators had time to think about it. Its author is well-known in this section as the man who discovered last year that Cornell was a hotbed of communism. This year he made the first page again with Mr. Cross' help, by getting through a bill which, ostensibly aimed at communists, did, in the language of one of New York's greatest governors, threaten the very foundations of democracy and "would abridge freedom of thought, freedom of press and freedom of assembly".

As between Governor Lehman and Senator McNaboe, those really concerned with freedom won't take very long in making their choice.

There is a lot of talk these days about dictators, attacks on freedom, that "it can happen here". Dictators do not just happen. They come because conditions and followers are there. They can come because well-intentioned people allow themselves to be gulled into defending the Frank Hagues, or encouraging or permitting such insidious attacks on liberty as proposals like that of Senator McNaboe. Most thinking people agree that communism the world over is on the way out. But strong arm fascism isn't. What free man should look out for is the intolerance of strong minority pressure groups.

In a talk with a reporter yesterday Mr. Cross spoke of "corpses". Perhaps he meant the McNaboe issue is a corpse. If it is perhaps the constitutional convention should bury it. If it isn't, the convention should see that it becomes one. But if Mr. Cross meant that Assemblyman Peterson and Assemblyman Shaw, who voted against this assault on the fundamentals of constitutional freedom are political corpses, he knows just nothing of what their friends and neighbors think of both.

'American Heritage'—

taking place all around us.

If a general war does break out in Europe, and there is every indication of it, we shall not be found wanting in our duty to ourselves and to the world at large. We shall not, and will not, however, involve ourselves in any question which will compromise our aloofness from European political and geographical disputes. If there be those who believe we should at all times be willing to "pull the chestnuts out of the fire", as we did in 1918, at which time, incidentally, we got our fingers burned, let them sign up now to be the first to go. Let them be the first to face the enemy. Let them be the first to feel the searing, burning, agonizing pain of poison gas. Let them be the first to know the anguish of arms or legs being torn from their bodies. Let them be the first to be expunged from the earth leaving only a serial number to mark their ever having existed. If they are fortunate enough to escape physical disability, let them be the first to return home with shattered minds. This is war, my friends, and we who are living witnesses have no desire to see our children sacrificed upon the altar of greed and sordid selfishness.

While we are thinking of Europe, and how to keep out of war, we must also consider putting our own house in order.

Recent events have shown a concerted effort to undermine the Constitution of the United States and the principles of free government. The heritage which we have, my friends, is one which should forever be guarded and held sacred. Subversive elements, both from without and within are at work striving to change our form of government.

We have faith in the men who founded this nation of ours. They were only men, however, subject to the frailities of human nature. They could not foresee every emergency to which the Constitution could readily be applied. They did, however, provide for amendments. If we are to abolish our system of impartial justice—if we are to abandon the principles of free press and free speech—the way to bring these changes about is through amendments to the fundamental law of the land.

We are today laboring under the stress and strain of a severe economic depression. Whatever our politics may be, whatever our philosophy of social and economic policies may be, let us be constructive in our criticism. Let those who do not like our way of doing things, and who seek to change our way by methods other than peaceful, be reminded that, while we may not entirely agree with those in authority we will brook no violence. This land is still a haven for the oppressed. If they do not like our system of government, and are not content to work for peaceful change, let them get out and stay out.

We shall come out of the depression victorious. Our task now is to sustain the morale and courage of those who find the going tough. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast". With charity in our hearts, with an unbounding faith in democratic principles of government, with a Hope that will not down, our country, the country of Washington and Jefferson, the country of Lincoln and Jackson will again be a country of happy smiling faces.

It has been both a privilege and a pleasure to address you, my friends. Let us close with the memory of those whom we honor today, firm in the conviction that they have not died in vain. I thank you.

The high school band led the parade and also played military airs in the cemetery observance. Miss Oneta Smith recited the classic World War poem "In Flanders Fields". Eldon Seamons pronounced benediction.

The same group of speakers and musicians went to Woodhull in the afternoon for services and exercises. William Kennedy is commander of the local Legion Post, which includes many Woodhull and vicinity veterans.

EMPIRE STATE ODDITIES

Honest Election

Because an ace of diamonds beats a queen of hearts, James J. MacGilvray is village trustee at Massapequa Park.

When MacGilvray tied with Charles Kerry for the office in a recent election, Justice George H. Furman decided he was without jurisdiction to approve a recount. After much wrangling in and out of courts, the candidates decided to cut a deck of cards for the office.

While members of the village board looked on, Kerr turned up a queen of hearts. Then MacGilvray cut the winning ace of diamonds.

May Be Milk-Man

When his car stalled, seemingly for no particular good reason, a Pulaski physician subjected the machine to a thorough examination and diagnosed the trouble as "water in the tank".

Investigation revealed the doctor's son had refueled the car with the garden hose.

The father's most pressing problem at present is to determine whether the youngster is a potential inventor, economic genius or gas station attendant.

Veteran Postmistress

Miss Maud Nellis has been postmistress at Elk Creek, near Ontario, for 29 years. She began her career as assistant to her father in the Elk Creek post office 40 years ago. Miss Nellis has had only one week's vacation since 1922.

Wants His Exercise

Complaining of the fuss people make over his birthday, 101-year-old Charles Jennette of Old Forge wonders why he can't work in his own garden without having folks get "all het up" about it.

Jennette is the only surviving Civil War veteran in the central Adirondacks. Two years ago he planned to marry an Albany woman but she changed her mind at the last minute.

The centennarian walks a mile to the Old Forge post office every day, tends his garden, and makes maple syrup each spring. He does not wear glasses but reads the daily newspaper.

Dog is Witness

"Take the stand", said Magistrate Thomas A. Aurelio recently to a brown-eared fox terrior in New York City's West Side Court.

The dog was placed on the witness stand in an effort to determine which man was his rightful owner, the one who insisted that the terrior's name was "Figi" or the other who called him "Herman".

"Here, Figi, Figi", called the first, and the dog went to him hesitantly.

"Here, Herman! Come Herman!" cried the other and the dog bounded into his lap.

"The dog is Herman", decided the judge.

Swords Into Plowshares

Little tin soldiers are being replaced by tiny farm implements.

The American Toy Fair, held recently in New York, revealed this marked change in children's tastes.

At the fair, which is a pre-view of what the American child will be given for Christmas, only about one per cent of the toys were suggestive of war and militarism. Tractors and plows had replaced them.

Jail Becomes Popular

The Canastota village lock-up has become more of a hostelry than a penal institution. Chief of Police Harry Williams has reported that although only eight arrests were made during April and $22 collected in fines, the local bastile furnished 144 transients a night's lodging and breakfast.

What Can You Suggest

At a merchants' meeting in Gowanda the suggestion was made that merchandise instead of cash prizes be distributed on Saturday nights. The proposal was satisfactory apparently to everybody present save one.

"What do you suggest I give them for $10?" commented Fred Place, funeral director.

Dinner Service DeLuxe

When a distracted woman traveling on a D. & H. train told Conductor M. Hogan that the only thing that would stop her baby's crying would be another bottle of milk to replace the one that had just been smashed on the floor, he immediately wired ahead to Whitehall.

Yardmaster Dave Ross there went scurrying home, filled his own baby's bottle with milk, dashed back to the station. Ross met the train on arrival and relieved the situation—and the baby.

Dog Eats Costly Meal

A dog owned by Gordon Coulter of Delhi has expensive and peculiar ideas as to diet.

Mr. Coulter recently lay down for a nap after removing his upper plate of artificial teeth which he placed on a low stand. As he slept his dog walked in, spied the teeth and swallowed them. Net loss to Mr. Coulter, $28.

Politician in the Making

Port Washington police seized a bicycle because it had no reflector or headlight. The youthful owner soon reported at headquarters with a quarter reflector, and drew the sergeant aside.

"Will you keep the bike for me a few days", he confidentally requested the puzzled officer.

"If I take the bike home and ask my father for a headlight, I won't get it", he explained. "But if I tell him I can't get it from the cops until I get a headlight, he'll give me one."

Image Attracts Crowds

Appearance of a shadow-like image resembling Our Lady of Lourdes on the living-room ceiling of the home of Charles Young of Syracuse has led curious crowds to make a public shrine of the home in recent weeks. More than 200 persons have visited Young's home in one day to see the shadow.

Here are some tid-bit items in regard to automobile accidents which I have picked up here and there.

The Soviet Government recently executed a hit-and-run driver by the firing squad method.

Well, why not? Murder is murder whether you commit it with a six-shooter revolver or a six-cylinder motor car.

Not long ago, in a Midwestern traffic court, a driver who had been involved in an automobile accident was brought before a judge. It developed that he had been drinking, that he had a glass eye and that his car had little or no braking power.

And I suppose he had one arm around a girl.

Warning horns are forbidden in Berlin; consequently drivers must keep a sharp lookout; the pedestrian death rate has been considerably reduced.

The horn-driver is still a menace in America.

A coupe going 60 miles an hour can turn over a 10-ton truck.

The steering wheel probably goes through your chest.

More than 100,000 accidents a year are directly charged to drivers asleep.

About 60 per cent of the "autocides" occur at night according to The Travelers Insurance Company, when there is only 25 per cent of the traffic on the roads.

FRUIT, FLOWERS AND GARDEN

Late-Planted Gardens

C. B. Raymond

Vegetables that grow best in the cool spring weather cannot be expected to give high yields when planted late, but some of the more sensitive crops such as tomatoes, cucumbers and muskmelons, should be planted only when the soil is warm and danger of frost ended.

Peas and spinach should, of course, have been planted early. Lettuce and radishes also do their best if started early but may still be expected to do well. Many gardens, planted in late May or early June give good yields.

Late-planted gardens probably need to be more heavily manured or fertilized than gardens started early, because the vegetables need to grow rapidly to make up for lost time. Rapid growth usually makes the crop more tender and increases the total yield.

Control of insects and diseases, along with weeds, will need attention soon. Get the weeds early. More can be done in one hour in preventing weed-growth while the weeds are less than an inch high than can be done in a half-day after the weeds are a few inches tall. Furthermore, if the weeds are destroyed when small, it will not be necessary to injure the crop roots.

How, What and Why

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelop, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Troubled With Termites

F. J. P., writes: "We are having some trouble with termites. What method should be used in controlling them?"

Dr. R. W. Leiby of the entomology department answers: "We are sending you information on the habits and control of termites in a special mimeographed bulletin, number E-3810. If you have other questions, after reading this, please write for additional help".

Permanent Hay Crops?

S. W., asks: "Do you have information on permanent hay crops?"

Professor G. H. Serviss of the agronomy department replies: "It is very doubtful if we have any such thing as a permanent hay crop.

"It's true that we have permanent pastures and also true that we could cut hay from bluegrass for a number of years by means of heavy and frequent applications of manure and commercial fertilizer. Under average farm conditions hay produced in such a way would cost more than it is worth.

"In many instances, though, an additional year or two can be profitably added to the life of a clover and timothy seeding by top-dressing with manure and superphosphate or superphosphate and some form of nitrogen. In fact, if you have a meadow with a real good timothy sod that you plan to plow, in view of high seed prices, you might well wait another year and top-dress instead in the manner suggested.

Alfalfa when sown on suitable soil is the nearest thing to a permanent hay crop that we have, but even alfalfa has to be reseeded occasionally. At the present time the College of Agriculture is doing considerable work with possible long-time mixtures and is getting some promising results".

Finger Lakes Association To Hold Joint Session

The Annual Spring meeting of the Finger Lakes Association will be held jointly with the session of the Regional Committee for preparing a World's Fair exhibit, on Wednesday, June 1, at the Osborne Hotel, Auburn. The session will open promptly at 12 noon with a luncheon, at which there will be a special entertainment during the dinner hour. The entire World's Fair project will then be presented by a speaker.

Afterward, the exhibit committee and the Association will hold business sessions. To welcome the visitors from the 10 counties of the area, members of the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Young Business and Professional Men's Clubs of Auburn will dine with the Finger Lakes delegates. Each association director and each county committee chairman has been urged to bring large delegations.

Meantime, in the various counties work of organizing county committees is well under way. Several counties, such as Tompkins and Cayuga, have on their committees members from every rural town and every city ward. Other counties have but a small, concentrated committee.

Steuben County has one of the most unusual setups. Dr. E. W. Woodbury, chairman, has placed W. E. Messer of Corning and Horace Sirrine of Hammondsport in charge of the industrial end; Forrest Loper of Jasper in charge of the agricultural end; William M. Stuart of Canisteo in charge of history and Reuben B. Oldfield of Bath in charge of historical records and antiques and to prepare biographies.

In all counties members of the Boards of Supervisors are showing a vital interest and are cooperating in the exhibit program to the full.

Cultivating vegetables more than enough to control weeds may cause considerable injury to the roots of the plants.

Growers Battle Cucumber Beetles

Growers of cucumbers and melons often have to battle, at this time of year, two insects known as the striped and spotted cucumber beetles. These beetles not only flock in large numbers to chew the tender leaves of young curcurbit or vine-bearing plants, but transmit a wilt disease and a mosaic sickness to the plants at the same time. The plants infected with wilt or mosaic condition may die when about half grown.

The beetles gather on the plants just as the plants come up, having passed the winter beneath trash piles and similar garden debris. Their feeding stunts the plants and make them appear sickly, says Dr. R. W. Leiby, extension entomology at Cornell University.

Additional injury is sometimes inflicted secretly by the worm stage of the beetles, as the small slender white worms feed in the stem and along the roots of the growing melon or cucumber plants. Thus, the beetle-feeding and worm injury may kill the plants outright.

Many growers find it necessary to keep their young plants dusted with a three-fourths of one per cent rotenone to control the injury. Smaller gardeners protect young plants with screen wire caps which exclude the beetles. Commercial growers rely upon applications of rotenone dust made every four days.

The secret of controlling cucumber beetles, says Dr. Leiby, is to dust the entire planting at one time and quickly, because the beetles are difficult to kill and the dust acts more as a repellent than a poisoning agent. Growers often find that the beetles collect on plants in the undusted part of the field.

A substitute dust for the three-fourths of one per cent rotenone is a mixture of one pound of calcium arsenate and 15 pounds of gypsum or talc. Talc is preferable to gypsum because it is lighter and more fluffy and flows better thru a hand dusting machine.

The young plants ought to be kept dusted at least until they begin to run along the ground to control beetle injury.

CAKES GO WRONG? EXPERT TELLS WHY

Mrs. Ames Describes Failures, Gives Their Causes

"Diagnosing cake failures is easy," says Mary Ellis Ames, director of Pillsbury's Cooking Service, "although to many housewives they seem mysterious."

Mary Ellis Ames, Director of Pillsbury's Cooking Service

Mrs. Ames lists below the common causes of cake failure.

Why Cakes Fail

Trouble: cracked top . . . hump or blisters on top. Caused by: too hot an oven . . . too much flour.

Trouble: dry cake. Caused by: too much beating . . . too much flour . . . too much baking powder . . . too little shortening, sugar, or liquid.

Trouble: heavy, gummy cake. Caused by: incorrect cooling . . . insufficient mixing . . . too much shortening, sugar, or liquid . . . wrong proportion of baking powder.

Trouble: (1) moist, sticky crust . . . (2) crust peels off . . . (3) spotted, mottled crust. Caused by: (1) too much sugar . . . (2) incorrect cooling . . . (3) too slow an oven.

Trouble: coarse-grained cake. Caused by: insufficient mixing . . . incorrect oven temperature . . . too much baking powder.

Trouble: fallen cake. Caused by: too little flour . . . too much baking powder, shortening, or sugar, too much batter in pan . . . too hot an oven.

Fine Flour a Necessity

"But no matter how perfectly you guard against these other causes of cake failures, you can't bake a fine cake unless you use a fine flour," warns Mrs. Ames.

Pillsbury's Sno Sheen Cake Flour is used exclusively in the Motion Picture Cooking School. The famous Sno Sheen blend of choice soft wheats was perfected by Pillsbury laboratory technicians through extensive research, and years of baking test cakes of every kind.

Steuben Farmers Treat Seed Potatoes

About seventy Steuben County farmers took advantage of the farm bureau co-operative seed potato treating service this year, according to an announcement from the farm bureau office in Bath. These seventy farmers had more than 8,000 bushels of potatoes treated by the hot corrosive sublimate method.

Potatoes were treated at Atlanta, Bowles' Corners between North Cohocton and Atlanta; Perkinsville; at the Charles Wolcott farm, Cohocton; Lee Edmond farm, Cohocton; Murray Barnes farm, Avoca; Osborne Bros. Farm, Fremont; Clarence Smith farm and Harold Putnam farm, both of Prattsburg. More than 1700 bushels of potatoes were treated at Harold Putnam's on the last day of treating May 19.

The hot corrosive sublimate method is effective in the control of rhizoctonia, a disease causing reduction in the yield of potatoes in different potato counties throughout New York State. The disease causes missed or skipped hills in many potato fields. The organisms causing the disease are to be found on the surface of the seed tubers.

Eight to nine crates of potatoes can be treated at one time in the wooden tank which was filled with the corrosive sublimate solution. The temperature of the solution was maintained at approximately 125 degrees F. by use of live steam from a steam boiler.

Potato growers who used the service this year are pleased with it and believe it is a cheaper and more effective method than they can use with ability on their own farm, and many predict that there will be a great many more farmers taking advantage of this service in future years.

Addison Trims Dundee High and Wins Coveted League Cup

Outplays losers 23 to 10—Develops shoeless player—All members of team score a run—Gives team a batting average of .353 for six games—To Play Hammondsport Here Friday.

The Addison Knights took the measure of the Dundee High School nine in Dundee in right good fashion Friday afternoon to the tune of 23 to 10. The locals scored 23 runs on 22 hits while the losers were gathering their ten runs on 9 hits. Heavy stick work aided by six errors on the part of the Dundee squad enabled the winners to pile up the biggest local score of the season. It also enabled the team to accomplish two other notable things namely, win the coveted cup for playing in class B for winning the largest number of games and also to raise the team's batting average for six games to .353, which is considered smart baseball.

The Addisonites took the lead in the first inning, scoring two runs on two hits and two errors. Dundee tried hard to scratch a few but managed to score only one run. The Addison big sticks came to bat in the second inning and when the scoring had finished the winners had six more runs and every man on the squad had batted in the inning.

Things coasted along in the third inning with the host team scoring one run. A rally by the Dundee team in the fourth netted three runs but the gain was quickly offset when the Knights came to bat and scored four runs to force a change of pitchers. The losers were held scoreless in the fifth and the Knights garnered three more. The sixth was a Dundee inning for they scored three runs on two hits while Addison only managed to get one run. The final inning was an Addison inning and the boys had such a good lead that they held a free swinging session that would beat a Benny Goodman band for they scored seven runs.

Bill Croft developed a Shoeless Joe Jackson stunt in the final inning when he was sent in as pinch hitter for Lyons. Someone had taken his shoes and he went to bat in his stocking feet, batted a run, stole second and third bases and came home for a run in his one time at bat.

Every man on the Addison squad scored at least one run and one hit.

The locals will play Hammondsport here Friday afternoon. Dundee trimmed Hammondsport.

Town Baseballers Win Two Over Week-end

The Addison town baseball squad won two games over the week-end taking two Corning teams into camp in the Little Six League. Sunday afternoon the boys entertained the Corning Independents here and in a last minute rally led by John Grange the locals triumphed 3 to 2 The visitors led throughout the game and at the final innings were 2 runs in the bag to a zero for Addison. Grange hit a storybook homer with two men on and from that time on there was no doubt as to the winner.

The Corning Cubs were defeated on their home grounds in a rather colorless game in which the locals piled up 16 runs to 2 for the home team. A period of inactivity and errors for the locals netted six more runs for the host team, Corning, but not enough to take the Memorial Day edge off the 16 run score of the local team.

Cat Adopts Foxes

Tippy, an eight-year-old calico cat, has adopted a family of five baby red foxes and is leaving her own family of four kittens to look out for themselves.

Harold Harter of Jordonville had the parents of the foxes in captivity on his farm. In order that Mr. and Mrs. Fox would not kill their young, the babies were taken from them and fed with medicine droppers until Tippy came to the rescue.

Tippy and her four kittens were moved into the Harter home from a nearby farm. The cat took over the duties of a foster mother and for a time had nine to feed. Gradually she showed favoritism to her adopted brood and the kittens were taken away.

Answers: 1. An American author who originated a dietary system known as Fletcherism. Fletcher advocated chewing food until almost all taste was lost and fasting until driven to food by hunger. Today, well-informed dietitians stress the importance of three well-balanced daily meals, including plenty of milk, fresh vegetables and fruits.

2. The medical term for infantile paralysis. At present, doctors are exerting every effort to find the cause of this disease, which is unknown.

3. Usually medicine. Both the Egyptians and the Greeks used snakes to depict medicine. Today, this same idea of the serpent is carried out on the automobile emblems used by doctors to denote their profession.

I sincerely hope the women who attended the cooking school enjoyed themselves and the school. All could not win prizes either. There were some pretty good recipes there. I had some of that chocolate sponge cake and it was sure good.

I would have liked that assignment the two women teachers in Addison High had two weeks ago. That of judging the gingerbread-making of the women of Freeman Grange. I don't know the technicalities of baking powder, baking soda, flour mixes and the like, but I do know good gingerbread.

Some women from out of the village were in front of the Avon Theatre Monday afternoon, May 16 waiting for the doors to open so they could go to the cooking school one week before the school opened. I think this even beats the world's series for waiting in line to see a game. Sorry that we did not make the dates clearer for these women, but we tried hard.

I thank my many friends and readers who have commented upon this column's not being present during the past two weeks. But too much cooking school either crowded out the items or did not give me time to write them. Thank you for your kind comments.

I would like to see Wombough Park made a place of beauty in the residential part of the village. Grass seed could be planted in the bare spots, the present grass trimmed and it would be an ideal spot to place some park benches.

—o—

There is considerable complaint about young people going out-of-town and dangers lurking in motor cars and the like. And I say that young love will find a way especially in these spring nights. And it would be an aid to Addison development to have park benches placed in Wombough park where young people could sit and talk things over and have a kiss or two if wanted. Young people, and some oldsters too, are going to make love anyway, and why not make it easy for them? This could be a good objective for some civic-minded group or organization.

—o—

I thank the many friends who so kindly spoke to others and to me about the absence of this line of chatter during the past two weeks. One fellow told me he did not always agree with me but likes to read the column. When people disagree with me, I wish they would put their dissentions in writing and send them in. However, don't sent in some other person's argument, for I have enough of my own. I would like to have this column made up entirely of contributions of interesting things from people in the whole territory, not just Addison.

—o—

That's all.

Baseball Players on Main Street Challenged to Organize for Game

Is the great American game of baseball dying in Addison? Are some of the business men forgetting how to hit balls and wave at strikes? Are some of them getting to old to stoop over to field a ball? These and many other questions can be answered if some of the business men will get out and play the game.

This is all a preface to a request for a ball game between the business men on the west side of the street and those on the east side of Main Street. Or a game between the northsiders and the southsiders. With the stores closed Wednesday afternoons and fair weather in view, that would be a good day to attract a crowd to a game, for with stores in adjacent villages and cities closed a good crowd should be in Addison. How about some one with initiative on each side of Main Street organizing this game and then turning the receipts over to a community project such as first aid equipment, seedings for the beautifying the dyke wall or providing benches for the park.

Tomato Poinsettia Blooms on Tables!

Few salads have greater year round popularity than tomato salads. That jolly blushing beauty, the tomato, sliced, diced, or whole, has the power of perking up even indifferent appetites—and there are so many variations on the tomato-salad theme that we never tire of it.

As in the preparation of all other salads, the dressing is the important thing to remember in serving the ever-present tomato. "Miracle Whip" Salad Dressing—neither too tart nor too mild, neither too sweet, nor too sour—is a perfect accompaniment to his rosy majesty, the tomato. "Miracle Whip" comes ready to serve in the jar—perfect for so many salad and sandwich uses that most housewives find the quart jar is the most economical buy for them. With the bother and uncertainty of preparing home-made salad dressings out of the way, salad-makers can concentrate on the more imaginative features of salad-making. The particular tomato salad featured here contains in its poinsettia-cut heart small flowerets of uncooked cauliflower, celery and cooked peas and beans. It's a simple combination, new, colorful, and delicious. When the combination is treated to a generous spoonful of "Miracle Whip" it becomes a chef's masterpiece of a salad.

TOMATO POINSETTIA SALAD

Tomatoes
Lettuce
Diced celery
Cooked peas
Cooked green beans
Cooked sliced carrots
Raw cauliflower flowerets
Salt, pepper
Miracle Whip Salad Dressing

Peel firm tomatoes, and cut each into five sections, leaving the tomatoes whole at the stem end. Spread the tomatoes slightly apart, place each in a crisp lettuce cup, and arrange them on a platter.

Toss the remaining vegetables lightly together, adding salt and pepper to taste. Fill centers of the tomatoes with the mixed vegetables, and garnish each portion with Miracle Whip Salad Dressing, and a small sprig of parsley.

Summer Eggs

After the April showers of May twenty-third we may look forward to picking May flowers next month. Teachers will find even the honor students squirming in their seats, prespiring as they keep one eye on the coming Regents and the other on the wide open spaces.

But chickens can't sweat like humans and consequently suffer more from extreme heat in summer. When this happens egg production drops. The laying flock must be kept comfortable in summer as well as in winter for good results.

In humans prespiring helps cool the body as the moisture evaporates. Chickens must breathe heavily and hold the wings away from the body in an effort to find comfort. Like humans they are not so hungry and do not consume the feed necessary for good egg production.

Plenty of clean, cool water at all times is essential. Changing the water twice or three times a day is to be recommended on hot days. Doing this may save birds which might die of heat prostration.

The house must be well ventilated. Openings should be provided near the roof through which the warm air may leave the building. In shed type roofs an opening under the eaves will effectively carry off warm air. Windows should be removed to allow a constant circulation of air. The cool air comes in through the windows and rear eaves forcing the warm air out through the openings at the peak or higher portion of the roof.

Hot weather brings rapid breeding of lice and mites and careful attention must be given to prevent a flock from becoming infested with them. Birds should be examined for lice every few days. One or two birds looked over every day or two will enable the flock owner to discover lice before they get a start.

Mites cannot be found on the birds easily as they spend the daylight hours in cracks and crevices of the building. A colony of mites looks like a mixture of salt and pepper and may be found on roosts, nests and walls wherever the wood is rough or affords cracks in which they can live and breed.

The laying flock should have access to shade at all times in hot weather. If there is no shade in the yard provide a shelter or plant corn just out of reach of the birds placed so shade will fall in the poultry yard.

Velveeta Hamburgers Deluxe

A man's home is his castle—no doubt of that, when he decides to take command of the kitchen! Every man harbors the secret feeling that, given a chance, he has the inspired hand of a chef! And chances are, he's right!

For those stag feasts, and other occasions when the man of the house decides to try a little plain and fancy cooking, no choice could be a happier one than hamburgers with Velveeta. Here's a satisfying feast, substantial enough to appeal to any hearty masculine appetite—and easy enough to prepare to make cooking seem the simplest art in the world.

Velveeta Hamburgers are made by pan-broiling individual hamburger patties, adding a slice of Velveeta on the hamburger, placing them beneath the broiler until the cheese food is melted to a luscious golden brown. Then place the hamburger cheese combination between halves of a toasted picnic bun, add piccalili, Bermudas, or your favorite condiment—and there is a feast indeed.

vice consul to Port Elizabeth, Union of South Africa, a dominion of Great Britain.

Mr. Taylor served his country well there for two years, and despite his youth, managed to ably represent this government in its dealings with industry and commerce in that far away land.

It was while serving in South Africa that he noticed his chronic illness, but being interested in his work paid little heed. This work, coupled with the climate aggravated his condition.

However he served two years in Port Elizabeth and then was sent to the largest of the South African consulates in Cape Town, the greatest industrial and commercial center of Great Britain in Africa. Mr. Taylor served here two years and he made a brilliant record for himself both among his co-workers and among those with whom he came in contact.

In the fall of 1936 he came home on vacation leave and renewed acquaintances in Addison and vicinity. He told some of his interesting experiences in the land so little known here and from the modest manner of his speaking, one could gather that this young man was going far in the service of his country.

Realizing his health condition he went to the Adirondack Mountains in January 1937 and has remained there since that time, never losing hope and fighting for the time when he could again take his place in service.

His condition had not been regarded as critical and it was a severe shock to his many friends here when they heard of his death. His mother was with him when the end came.

While in Addison Allan was a member of the Church of the Redeemer and also a member of the choir.

Funeral services will be held this (Thursday) afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the home, corner of Front and Church streets with the Rev. Albert H. Head officiating. Interment will be made in Addison Rural Cemetery.

In addition to the parents above mentioned, Mr. Taylor leaves a brother, Curtis, a senior in Duke University and a sister, Janet at home.

Hi-Lights and Shadows of the Week's News

The major fund of $400,000 was split among four women each of whom gave birth to nine children in ten years since the eccentric Vance Miller's death. Two other women with records of bearing nine children were satisfied by payments of $12,500. Besides this sum and the $100,000 each of the four women winners get, there is another $75,000 held up by the executors until the entire estate is liquidated. A large part of this will go for attorneys' fees.

Speaking before a Memorial Day crowd at Gettysburg Monday Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan warned that "those who try to trade liberty for security" might lose both. Referring to the subversive forces which are more dangerous than those who would openly overthrow the government, Vandenberg declared". If the Constitution needs changing, it can properly be done by the people themselves Any other change is treason—treason to American inheritance—treason to Gettysburg—treason to Memorial Day."
